Course status: optional, mandatory – Criminal Law Scientific Field, I module: Criminal Law Sciences
Number of ECTS: 10
Requirements:
Aims of the course: Deeper examination of basic criminal law institutes. Developing and completing existing knowledge. Taking a critical attitude and expressing critical thinking. Mastering the multimethodological scientific approach. Acquiring scientific and thoughtful maturity.
Course result: To achieve the necessary level of knowledge and skills that will enable the candidate to undertake independent research steps in the area of general part of the criminal law, to critically examine the existing legal provisions and to present proposals de lege ferenda .
Course content: The course includes an in-depth study of individual areas from the general part of criminal law. Attention is paid to the solutions contained in the Criminal Code of 2006, the amendments from 2009, as well as the reform of the criminal legislation from 2012, 2013, 2014 and 2016. The adoption of this Code represents a significant step forward in the improvement of our criminal legislation. The Code, on the one hand, contains a number of solutions from earlier legislation that proved to be effective in practice over the years of implementation and which also confirmed their doctrinal justification. On the other hand, which is a special quality of this Code, a large number of new solutions were created, which were created on the basis of the views of modern criminal law theory, and to a certain extent, they were modeled on some compatible solutions from certain foreign codes. In this way, our country has provided the necessary normative platform for the construction of modern and at the same time effective criminal legislation based on the basic principles of criminal law, legality, guilt and legitimacy that are placed in the context of the real needs of civil society. In the General part of the Criminal Code, a number of solutions, in view of their complex nature, deserve a comprehensive scientific analysis. These are the following general institutes of criminal law: the general notion of a criminal offence, an act of minor significance, guilt, legal error, force and threat, co-perpetration, and new solutions in the field of criminal sanctions.
